Get ready for the 1922 world series.

It is coming right to Washington.

It is coming to American League Park next Wednesday afternoon.

The Washington Times, always seeking to give the fans the very best service possible, has completed arrangements to show the fans a world series of their own. And it won't cost them a cent.

Two baseball teams, composed of Uncle Sam's husky marines, one from the Navy Yard and the other from the Barracks, in uniforms, will take part in The Washington Times world series. One will represent the New York Yankees, winner of the American League pennant, and the other will represent the New York Giants, the National League champions.

Direct communication between The Washington Times and the ball park will carry every detail of the big series being played at New York's Polo Grounds within a few seconds after they have happened.

Then the two marine teams will carry out the same play as close as possible right there on the field. Thus, sitting comfortably in the grandstand, Washington fans may watch a practical duplication of the world series games just as they are being played in New York.

President Clark C. Griffith is co-operating with The Times to make this reproduction of the world series a big success and absolutely realistic. His regular staff will announce plays, handle the score board, etc., so there will not be a hitch.

The gates to the park will be thrown open at 1 o'clock to admit the fans who wish to watch the series. Each game will begin in New York at 2 o'clock, and as soon as possible thereafter The Washington Times will have the details right from the Polo Grounds at Georgia avenue for the use of the two marine clubs on the field.

The regulation scoreboard will be used so that the fans will be able to follow the lineups of the two contenders in the blue ribbon series of the diamond. It will thus be possible to know just what batsman is at the plate, what he does or fails to do, and just how the big game is progressing in the far-away metropolis.

The Washington Times will see that each fan is given all the necessary information for his own guidance in following the game on the field. In addition to the daily lineup, announcements will be made of various side features taking place at the Polo Grounds. No detail will be left out to make The Washington Times world series a success as far as possible.

And, remember, every fan in Washington is invited to these games to be shown at the baseball park, beginning next Wednesday.
